Officials conduct emergency drill at Bowdoin T station

BOSTON -- It was a scene of mass chaos outside the Bowdoin T station Sunday morning, but it was all just a drill.

The Massachusetts Department of Transportation along with the MBTA conducted an "emergency response drill" at the Blue Line stop earlier Sunday.

Boston police and fire departments, as well as the FBI and other agencies, participated.

The drill simulated a terrorist attack, and response for the subway system.

"From my perspective, what's really important is to know what to do when they do happen," state Secretary of Transportation Jeffrey Mullan said. "When I say they don't happen, they don't happen every day, and we hope that they never happen, but unfortunately in the times that we're in, we see that they do happen, so we need to be prepared."

Local students played the roles of panicked commuters and victims.

Officials said the test was an overwhelming success.
